Should create two wiki pages:

Broad overview of how bluemine code contributions work

How bluemine does code review

I started on a basic [[Contribute]] page and am working on a [[Code Review]] one now. I think this is good enough to launch, we will be changing these as we refine the development process.

I've done a brain dump of my own [[Code Review]] system to the wiki. Still need to create the actual process but I think these don't need to be finalized before we launch.

Proposed workflow: http://nvie.com/posts/a-successful-git-branching-model/, though we should probably rename the "master" branch from the post to "stable" and the "develop" branch to "master", as the "master" branch commonly is the branch development happens on on github.

[[Contribute]] will probably need some smaller adjustments, but should be mostly OK, the code part has been moved to [[Contribute Code]] and needs work still.

I think [[Contribute Code]] is at a point I'd call it finished save for smaller wording/grammar fixes. I've begun on the Branch names and general "code flow" on [[Release Process]], you might want to have a look there too.

[[Contribute Code]] is finished, the branch names are now on [[ChiliProject Repository]], they should be finished once we have a graphic to show it all (Holger's on that currently).

Once the [[Code Review]] is deemed finished, this can be closed.

Felix,

The wiki pages look good. I think once we have a graphic of the branches we can finish this issue. [[Code Review]] can be finished up as we go, it's a more fluid process.

Assigning to Holger for the branch graphic. I can try to create it if needed.

Holger added the branch graphic to [[ChiliProject Repository]] so this issue is complete.
